

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA
ASHEVILLE DIVISION

CIVIL NO. 1:00CV141
(1:96CR21-1)

RAYMOND FRANCIS,

Petitioner,

Vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

ORDER

THIS MATTER is before the Court on the Petitioner's motion pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e) to alter or amend judgment. The motion is denied.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The Petitioner's motion pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255 was denied by the undersigned; Petitioner appealed the Court's Judgment to the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and the case was affirmed. United States v. Francis, 62 Fed. Appx. 507 (4th Cir. 2003).

II. DISCUSSION

Petitioner moves for relief pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e) which provides that any motion to alter or amend judgment must be filed no later than ten days after entry of judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). The "judgment" to which the Petitioner refers in the motion was actually an order. See, Order filed May 10, 2005. Thus, this motion is actually brought pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b) which provides in pertinent part: “On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party . . . from a final judgment . . . for . . . any . . . reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment.” However, it is clear that this motion is actually a second § 2255 motion.

As amended by the AEDPA [Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act], § 2255 bars successive applications unless they contain claims relying on

(1) newly discovered evidence that, if proven and viewed in light of the evidence as a whole, would be sufficient to establish by clear and convincing evidence that no reasonable factfinder would have found the movant guilty of the offense; or

(2) a new rule of constitutional law, made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court, that was previously unavailable.

In addition to enacting the substantive standards we have just described, the AEDPA modified the procedures governing successive collateral review applications. As a result of these modifications, a prisoner seeking to file a successive application in the district court must first obtain authorization from the appropriate court of appeals.

In the absence of pre-filing authorization, the district court lacks jurisdiction to consider an application containing abusive or repetitive claims.

United States v. Winestock*, 340 F.3d 200, 204-05 (4th Cir. 2003). “The ultimate question here is whether [Petitioner’s] motion for [relief] should [be] treated as a successive collateral review application.” Id.*, at 203.

As previously noted, the Petitioner has already filed one motion pursuant to § 2255. The undersigned has no jurisdiction to entertain a second one unless it has been certified “by a panel of the appropriate court of appeals[.]” 28 U.S.C. § 2255. Thus, if this motion is actually a successive petition, it must be presented in the first instance to the Fourth Circuit. Winestock*, supra, at 205 (“As a result of these modifications, a prisoner seeking to file a successive application in the district court must first obtain authorization from the appropriate court of appeals.”).

In support of this motion, the Petitioner basically rehashes the circumstances surrounding his original charge and the legal rationale in support of his arguments against his sentence.

[D]istrict courts must treat Rule 60(b) motions as successive collateral review applications when failing to do so would allow the applicant to evade the bar against relitigation of claims presented in a prior application or the bar against litigation of claims not presented in a prior application.

[This] holding raises the question of how to distinguish a proper Rule 60(b) motion for a “successive [application] in 60(b)’s clothing.” There may be no infallible test for making this distinction, but a relatively straightforward guide is that a motion directly attacking the prisoner’s conviction or sentence will usually amount to a successive application, while a motion seeking a remedy for some defect in the collateral review process will generally be deemed a proper motion to reconsider. Thus, a brand-new, free-standing allegation of constitutional error in the underlying criminal judgment will virtually always implicate the rules governing successive applications. Similarly, new legal arguments or proffers of additional evidence will usually signify that the prisoner is not seeking relief available under Rule 60(b) but is instead continuing his collateral attack on his conviction or sentence.

Id.*, at 206-07 (quoting Lazo v. United States, 314 F.3d 571, 573 (11th Cir. 2002) (other internal citations and quotations omitted). Here, the Petitioner raises new allegations of constitutional error and new legal arguments based on recent Supreme Court decisions. These are successive claims because they are based on new law which is not retroactively applicable to collateral attacks. Id.; Gitten v. United States, 311 F.3d 529 (2d Cir. 2002); Santiago v. United States, 64 Fed. Appx. 281, 286 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 992 (2003) (“Santiago’s Apprendi/Castillo claim was first raised in the District Court as part of his Rule 60(b) motion for reconsideration. . . . [A] Rule 60(b) motion that raises entirely new grounds for a collateral attack is indeed a successive habeas petition that requires leave to file from the Court of Appeals.”); United States v. Ray, 4 Fed. Appx. 197 (4th Cir. 2001). The other arguments raised directly attack the Petitioner’s conviction and sentence and thus are successive. Therefore, they are subject to the requirements for successive applications; that is, they must first be presented to the Fourth Circuit. As a result, the undersigned has no jurisdiction to entertain any of the claims presented.

III. ORDER

IT IS, THEREFORE, ORDERED that the Petitioner’s motion to alter or amend judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e) is a successive motion pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255 and is hereby DENIED for lack of jurisdiction.
